

Group

What do you mean by group?

- ☐ Two or more people, in face-to-face interaction, each aware of their group membership and interdependence, as they strive to achieve their goals.
- ☐ Two or more interdependent individuals who influence one another through social interactions that commonly include structures involving roles and norms, a degree of cohesiveness, and shared goals.
- ☐ Are aggregations and groups same?

- ❑ A collection of organisms in one location with no obvious social structure or social organization, possessing only a minimum of shared purpose or interdependence.
 - ❑ Examples include people in a shopping mall, commuters on a subway platform, or a group of butterflies around a puddle of water.

Three conditions of definition of group

- ☐ the relations among the members are interdependent
- ☐ each member's behaviour influences the behaviour of each of the others,
- ☐ the members 'share an ideology' – a set of beliefs, values and norms which regulate their mutual conduct.”

Types of groups

Based on intimacy

- ❑ Primary group: There is an intimate face-to-face relationship among the members and the members experience the 'we feeling' to the maximum. Family, play groups and village community come under this category
- ❑ Secondary groups: These are characterised by anonymous, impersonal, and instrumental relationships.
- ❑ The division is not as simple in the current socio-political scenario

On the basis of rules

- ❑ Formal group: It is generally formed on the basis of specific norms, rules and values. The group of students in a classroom comes under the category of formal group. So, school is one of the formal group setting.
- ❑ Informal group: The nature of the group is not formal at all. The rules are usually flexible. Play groups, peer group and social clubs etc. are examples of informal groups.

On the basis of relationship

❑ In-group/ we group vs Out group

- In In-group or we group, we identify ourselves within that group wherein the members have common objective and common interest. They have a sense of 'we feeling'. The members of the in groups treat others as outsiders. These groups can be formed on the basis of relationship, country, political interests, economic interests etc.
- Out-group is one in which the members are considered as outsiders by the in group people. Groups other than ingroup are generally called out groups.

Group antagonism, a term specific to the field of social psychology, is defined as the situation that appears when the members of a group named ingroup adopt negative manners towards members of another group named outgroup

Stereotype

Prejudice

Discrimination

Stereotype

- First used by Lippman in 1922 in his book 'public opinion'
- "The attribution of general psychological characters to large human groups" (Watson, 1974, p.80).
- "Fixed ideas about an individual, group, or social status" (Barker, 1991, p.227).
- Beliefs about social groups in terms of the traits or characteristics that they are believed to share
- Stereotypes are cognitive frameworks that influence the processing of social information.

WOW, YOU
SUCK AT MATH.

WOW, GIRLS
SUCK AT MATH.

1. Overgeneralization
 2. Mostly focus on very favourable and very unfavourable traits
 3. Ignores the variations within a particular group

How do you think stereotyping impacts our life?

1. Impacts on self-esteem; i.e., the way one value oneself. Internalization of negative stereotypes may make someone believe that he/she/they are not good enough.
2. Stereotype threat/the fear of confirming the stereotype might induce anxiety which may impact the performance
3. Impacts the confidence/self-efficacy belief of a person
4. Stereotype against a group might impact their selection for a job, how much the group members are liked by others, what locality they live in etc.

Prejudice

- Prejudice can be an affective feeling towards a person based on their perceived group membership.
- Is it always explicit?
- Old-fashioned racism vs symbolic racism

Old fashioned racism/ Jim Crow racism

- Jim Crow laws enforced racial segregation till 1965 in USA
- Racial segregation and discrimination enforced by laws, customs, and practices in especially the southern states of the U.S. from the end of Reconstruction in 1877 until the mid-20th century
- Based on the negative stereotype against certain races
- Beliefs that a particular race is biologically or intellectually inferior

Symbolic Racism

It is usually described as a coherent belief system combining the following ideas:

- that racial discrimination is no longer a serious obstacle to blacks' prospects for a good life;
- that blacks' continuing disadvantages are due to their own unwillingness to take responsibility for their lives; and that,
- as a result, blacks' continuing anger about their own treatment, their demands for better treatment, and the various kinds of special attention given to them are not truly justified (see Sears, van Laar, Carrillo, & Kosterman, 1997).

These beliefs come out of what has been known as a psychological “blend” of negative affect directed against blacks with conservative values, particularly the belief that blacks violate cherished American values.

The term “symbolic” was chosen to highlight the idea that these beliefs were rooted in an abstract system of early learned moral values and ideals (rather than in more concrete personal experiences or self-interested motivations) and that these beliefs referred to blacks as an abstract collectivity rather than to specific black individuals.

Aversive racism

- The american dilemma (Myrdal, 1944) between great egalitarian values and racism traditions
 - In 2001, Bobo found that the support by whites for integration of African Americans have increased steadily from 1960s onwards
 - On the other hand, the disparity and discrimination still exists
- Aversive racism is a result of conflict between the denial of personal prejudiced beliefs and underlying negative feelings about a race
- It is associated with discomfort, uneasiness, and avoidance.

Discrimination

- ❑ Discrimination is the unfair or prejudicial treatment of people and groups based on characteristics such as race, gender, age, or sexual orientation.

Microaggression

- ❑ Microaggressions are “verbal, behavioural, or environmental indignities, intentional or unintentional, that communicate hostile, derogatory, or negative slights and insults toward members of oppressed groups” (Nadal, 2008, p. 23)
- ❑ 'Subtle and Stunning' put-downs which are often automatic and non-verbal (Pierce et al., 1978, p.68)
- ❑ 'Death by thousand cuts'
- ❑ Might involve Microassaults (explicit and conscious attacks on a victim; often at a lesser intense level than overt aggression), Microinsults (unconscious and demeaning acts), and Microinvalidations involve negating marginalized group members' feelings and experiential reality.

Theories of Group Antagonism

1. Realistic Group Conflict Theory: Group antagonism is inevitable since there is real competition between groups on power and resources.
 - Robbers cave experiment (Sherif & Sherif, 1954)
 - Real deprivation vs. relative deprivation

2. Authoritarian Personality Theory

- Theodore Adorno (1940) believed that people develop an authoritarian personality because of the upbringing they had as a child.
- This theory suggests that prejudice is associated with a particular personality type.
- Authoritarian personalities have a number of characteristics. They are very concerned with status and upholding convention; they are very conformist; they tend to be very obsequious towards people they see as having a higher status than them but treat those 'below' them with contempt and they are suspicious of and hostile towards those they see as different.

- If their parents are overly strict and punitive and show little love, the child grows up harbouring resentment and hostility towards their parents. This hostility gets directed towards members of minority groups through a process of displacement.
 - A mechanism of displacement

3. Displacement of aggression

- ❑ Displacement is a defense mechanism in which a person redirects an emotional reaction from the rightful recipient onto another person or object. For example, if a manager screams at an employee, the employee doesn't scream back—but he may yell at his spouse later that night.

4. Social Identity Theory

- Tajfel (1982)
- Three assumptions
 1. People categorize the entire world into ingroup and outgroup
 2. People derive a sense of self-esteem from their social identity of an ingroup.
 3. People's self-concepts partly depend on how they evaluate their ingroup as compared to the outgroups.
- ❑ Assumed similarity: perception that members of the in-group share their attitudes and values.
- ❑ Out-group homogeneity effect: perception that members of the outgroup are more similar to each other than members of the in-group to each other.
- ❑ In-group favouritism: the tendency to give more favourable evaluations and greater rewards to members of one's in-group as compared to members of out-groups.

5. Sense of group position theory:

- Proposed by Bobo (1999)
- Dominant groups' sense of group position is derived from
 - A belief in the superiority of the dominant group
 - Perceptions of members of the subordinate group as alien and different
 - Proprietary claims over superior resources
 - Feelings of threat from subordinate groups coveting superior resources

6. Social Dominance Theory:

- Proposed by Sidanius and Pratto (1999)
- Desire to have one's in-group in a position of dominance or superiority to out-groups.
High social dominance orientation is correlated with higher levels of prejudice
- Two mechanisms through which dominant groups maintain their position
 - Benevolent paternalism: affectionate and benevolent treatment towards the subordinate group members, demanding deference in return.
 - "in the manner of a father dealing with his children"
 - Legitimizing myth: an ideology that justifies inequalities in the current social hierarchy

How do we reduce group antagonism?

1. Contact theory: The theory that prejudice against a social group can be reduced by appropriate contact with individuals from that group
 - a. Contact should be based on co-operative interdependence. It is a type of relationship where outcomes of two people/groups depend on each other's actions
 - b. Contact must also occur among individuals with equal status
 - c. The contacts should be frequent
 - d. Contacts should be supported by the institutions

2. Recategorization:

large and inclusive group categories in order to defuse conflict among smaller groups
